As I've grown older and built up more and more video content, I've migrated away from traditional live lecture. I feel like I talk PLENTY on all those videos, and at least they're edited for time-wasting errors!

Still, some students still like the traditional lecture, so I'll try to have something for you, every day, either live or recorded, to get you off the ground on each topic.

A lot of students are fine just using the homework questions to motivate and illuminate the theory explained in the textbook. A lot of the theory and examples are hard to understand until somebody asks you a question and you start looking for answers. Then, all of a sudden, what the book is saying makes sense, because you can see what it wants you to do with the new theory.

We call this heuristic or problem-based learning.

Quizzes Require Lock-Down Browser.

Quizzes on WebAssign take time to prep for and they take about 2 hours to work.
That's a lot of hours! That's why they're optional!

Quizzes are based on WebAssign homework-type questions.

Lock-Down Browser can be a trial for students, depending on the hardware and software they're using at home.

CamScanner App - make multi-page PDFs

Notes App for iPhone

Printer-scanner with scan-to-PDF capability.

Weekly Written Assignment: Write out the question in your own words. You can shorten things up so long as it's clear and complete, and show all steps of the solution. Circle Final Answer.

Written Midterm and Final: Just write out a complete answer, like you would on Weekly work, but no need to write out the question. Circle Final Answer.

If it's a real-world question, the units used should be included in the lexicon as follows:

Let x = the amount of money invested, in dollars

Then your final answer (circled) should be $x = $10,000$

Let x = the length of the wire, in meters

Then your final answer (circled) should be $x = 50 \text{ m}$
